

PANS IN THE LANE.
 After milking was over,
 Annie would follow the cows;
 Half a mile, down to the river;
 And turn them in to browse.
 Next little figure is Annie,
 Handling the pans in the lane;
 Letting down the milk pail;
 Just in the sunlight's wane.
 Will roses bloom beside her
 Match and her cheeks lovely red;
 And the leaves trying to hide her,
 Dance at her musical tread.
 Withering curls peep from her bonnet—
 Peep like bright birds from their nest!
 And her heart—oh, to have won it!
 But she has a gentle quest.
 Lips may be humming a ditty,
 And faces may show unceasing;
 But secrets there are—what a pity
 That some are easy to learn.
 Now, while the robins are nestling,
 Why does she wait in the lane?
 Though if white arms need resting,
 No one, of course, could complain.
 Lights in the farm house are gleaming,
 And bars must be laid in their place;
 But, little Annie stands dreaming,
 A beautiful blush on her face.
 It is late! not that she cares now;
 Ah! merry eyes, soft and brown,
 Could you not tell why she wears now,
 Just the least mite of a frown?
 Over the path by the hill-side,
 Some one would wander to-night;
 Some one who came from the mill-side;
 Lured by two eyes that are bright.
 Meadow and valley grow stiller,
 Under the earlier stars;
 Would it be strange if the miller
 Help Annie put up the bars?

ARTHEMUS WARD AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—Arthemus has visited this great lion of the English Metropolis, and thus speaks of it:
 The British Museum is a magnificent free show for the people. It is kept open for the benefit of all.
 The humble costumer, who traverses the busy streets with a cart containing all kinds of vegetables, such as carrots, turnips, etc., and drawn by a spirited jackass—he can go to the Museum and reap benefits therefrom as well as the lord of high degree.
 "And this," I said, "is the British Museum! These noble walls," I continued, punching them with my umbrella to see if the masonry was all right—but I wasn't allowed to finish my enthusiastic remarks, for a man with a gold band on his hat said, in a harsh voice, that I must stop poking the walls. I said, I would do so by all means. "You see," I said, taking hold of the tassel which waved from the man's belt, and drawing him close to me in a confidential way, "You see, I'm looking round this Museum, and if I like it I shall buy it."

The following is the "nub" of a yarn which is told about a big whiskey gazing fellow who came home drunk one night and sat down by the fire to warm his feet, which were regular "warm killers," says the legend: After dozing some time he awoke chilly; the cubbers were entirely hid from view, and seeing his feet, mistook them for his little boy, when with a majestic side wave of the hand, he said: "Stand aside, my little son, and let your poor father warm himself."

MATRIMONY.
 "My dear, what makes you always yawn?" The wife exclaimed, her temper gone.
 "Is it you or is it the day?" he asked.
 "Not so, my love," he said, "not so: But man and wife are one, you know: And when alone, I'm weary!"

MR. SWINBURNE. In his new book, is always talking of scorching kisses, and says of one of his peculiar heroines:
 "I dare not always touch her, lest the kiss leave my lips charred."
 One of his critics suggests that there is a parallel to this in literature, in the case of the well known monkey, who:
 "Married the baboon's sister,
 Smacked his fire and then he kissed her,
 Kissed so hard he raised a blister:
 She set up a yell."

A PAIR of lovers appeared in one of the churches at St. Louis to be married, last week, when a young female arose in the audience and forbade the bans, declaring that the man was engaged to her. The clergyman refused to go on with the ceremony, and a Justice of the Peace had to be called to tie the knot.

BERTIE. "Papa, when I grow up, may I be what I like?" Papa: "Yes, my boy, you may choose your own profession." Bertie: "Then I'll be a sweep, for I shall never have to wash my face!"

SAID a wag to a friend, "Miss—though a rather broad featured young lady, has a very benign countenance." "Yes," said the friend, "it is—seven by nine."

"You look," said an Irishman to a pale, haggard smoker, "as if you had got out of your grave to light your cigar, and couldn't find your way back."
